Give Me the Flute and Sing by Jubraan Xaliil Jubraan
(Khalil Gibran)

Give me the flute and sing, for song is the secret of existence, and the soft lament of the flute will remain after existence has passed to nothingness.

Give me the flute and sing
for the flute is the secret of eternity,
and the soft lament of the flute will remain
after existence has passed to nothingness.

Have you, like me, taken the forest as an abode without walls, followed wild brooks,
and scaled giant boulders?

Have you bathed in perfume, and dried yourself in pure light, or drunk the dawn like wine in ethereal cups?

Have you sat in the late afternoon like me within the vinyards as the bunches of grapes dangle like golden chandeliers?
Have you taken the pasture as a bed at night, and covered yourself with the blanket of empty space deeming little what is to come, and forgetful of what has passed?

Give me the flute and sing,
for song is as good as immortality...

Give me the flute and sing
Forget both the disease and the cure People are lines written, but in water
Give me the flute and sing, for loss of self in oneness with the universe is the sweetest medicine …